HANDY & HARMAN have been suppliers of precious metals in industry since 1867. Starting as bullion dealers, then servicing the silversmithing and gold jewellery crafts. HANDY & HARMAN produce the finest silver anodes for the electroplater and are constantly researching the sterling silver uses. In karat golds, H&H "SATIN GOLD" is the first choice of the successful jewellery manufacturer. HANDY & HARMAN pioneered silver brazing alloys, used in industry. H&H alloys are the standard for all government, military and trade association specifications. Working through design and production engineers we have ensured the place of silver brazing alloys in profitable manufacturing. Today's project is the use of precious metal "BI-METALS", where the best of two worlds—precious metal properties on base metals—is the current goal of industry. We have assumed leadership in this field. We are ready to demonstrate where our wealth of experience and the best in precious metal alloys can aid your production. All we ask is the opportunity.

Not just in banking. In business.

In the same way in which you are in business: marketing products and services—competitively.

You know the most important of our products: money.

But we're in the business of helping you in many other ways. With world-wide credit information, for instance. Or export market information—about any country, anywhere, and any worthwhile firm in that country.

Since we're close to every business community in Canada, and hundreds more abroad, we know the people you'd like to meet and talk to—businessmen, professionals, public servants; we can help you with acquisitions and mergers, or to find out about plant locations, or negotiate a foreign financing problem.

So you'll do well to think of us not just as a bank, but as a bank that's in business: in the business of serving you, because we can understand your problems, talk your language, think like you do. And act just as quickly.

INTRODUCTION

Canadian Trade Index has been the authoritative guide to buying and selling in Canada for over 65 years. It contains a comprehensive list of Canadian manufacturers having more than a local distribution for their products, irrespective of membership in The Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The Index always keeps up-to-date with the buying and selling needs of the times and it can be safely stated that it is the foremost directory of its kind in Canada today.

This new edition is designed to give you a detailed account of over 12,700 manufacturing companies across Canada. Listed for your easy reference are company name, address, names and titles of operating executives, branch offices and plants, brand names, parent and subsidiary companies, foreign representatives, number of employees, a geographical breakdown of manufacturing establishments by province and city and a finely classified directory of Canadian made products.

With approximately 10,000 detailed product classifications (indexed in Section F with French, Spanish or Portuguese translations) prospective purchasers will be able to get in touch at once with manufacturers of the goods desired. Where specialized information is needed, buyers are invited to call on the services of the Commercial Intelligence Department of the Association. It is suggested that importers abroad should first communicate with the nearest Canadian Government Trade Commissioner, consulting the list of their addresses in Appendix I of the Export Section. Representatives of overseas firms visiting Canada are invited to call at the Head Office of the Association where they will be given every possible assistance.

Users of the Index will find the regular advertising sections invaluable in supplementing the information contained in the alphabetical and classified sections. Page numbers of display advertisements are indicated in the alphabetical and product listings of companies which advertise. In addition, individual advertisements appear in the classified product section. Your attention is also drawn to the Classified Advertising Section beginning on page G-10 and the Service advertisements beginning on page G-1.

At the beginning of each section you will find a detailed description of how the Index may be used to its fullest advantage on your behalf.

The publishers wish to thank the manufacturers, government departments, and other organizations who have furnished information upon which this book is based.

Machining coppermetals

–a practical guide to working with the 50-odd alloys offered in rod form by Anaconda. Why not write for a free copy? After all, it might lead to sweeping changes in your manufacturing methods.

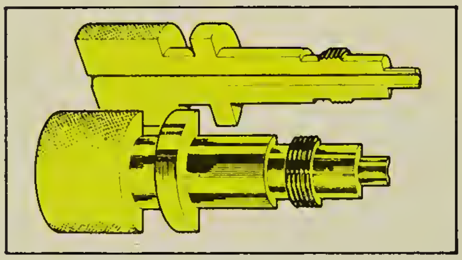
The things you can do with coppermetals. Some unique, some just cheaper and faster.

Since brasses and bronzes—earliest metals to be fabricated by man—were first discovered, ease of working has been one of their most attractive properties. Today, Anaconda offer over 50 subtly differentiated alloys in rod form alone. The result is even greater ease of fabrication: when presented with a particular machining problem, Anaconda can offer an alloy with characteristics exactly suited to the job in hand. Anaconda contend that the wide range of physical and mechanical properties available in coppermetal, linked with ease of working and consequent production efficiencies, makes coppermetal potentially the most economical raw material for many small-part manufacturers.

Machinable. OK. Now define your terms.

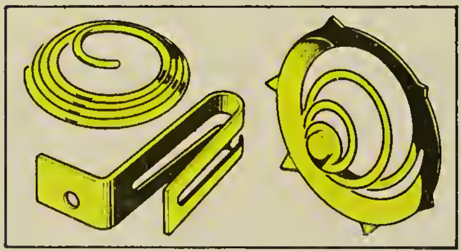
Any machinability rating can only be relative. For convenience, Anaconda rate the easiest-working coppermetal—Free Cutting Brass—at 100, and rate the others below it on a comparative scale. The range of standard alloys then falls into three loosely defined groups. Free cutting alloys rated from 70-100. These are normally chosen when extreme ease of machining is more important than any other physical factor. They produce short, brittle, chips and can be turned, using high-speed-steel cutters, at between 300-700 f.p.m. surface speed, with .006″ to .020″ roughing feeds, and .003 to .015 finishing feeds. Readily machinable alloys, rated from 30-70. These produce longer, tougher, chips, and need more care if high speeds are to be used in machining. Less readily machinable, rated below 30. Turnings are long and tough, and low working speeds are essential. "Low" is purely relative: for turning, surface speeds with high speed steel cutters are likely to be between 75 and 150 f.p.m., with .015″ to .040″ roughing feeds, .005″ to .020″ finishing feeds.

Intricate? Precise? Select your coppermetal.



Deep cuts, fine detail, high finish—your machine shop can turn out highest quality coppermetal parts using conventional equipment and techniques. Here's the bonus; the more carefully you select your alloy for the job in hand, the more effective will your operation be. Anaconda have the metals, and the facts, and the figures, and the experience, to help you speed production, improve quality, cut costs. Keep in touch through your Anaconda representative.

Need strength? Here it is.

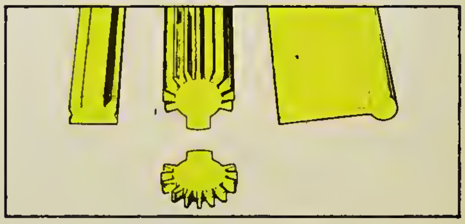


Phosphor bronzes are tough. As springs, contacts, diaphragms, tubing, bellows, they'll flex and flex without failure. Tensile strengths of 100,000 p.s.i., or fatigue strengths of 32,000 p.s.i. make these the coppermetals for punishing work.

Could fatigue be a problem? Coppermetals still provide the answer.

You don't necessarily have to choose between machinability and physical strength in a coppermetal. Some Anaconda alloys let you have it both ways—Everdur range, for example. One, #637, belongs in the readily machinable group, where it is rated at 60, yet offers high tensile and yield strengths.

Special section, special size? Maybe it's a stock line at Anaconda.



Anaconda take you halfway towards the finished part by offering their wide range of alloys in a wide range of shapes and sizes—rods, square, hexagonal and polygonal sections, plate, strip, more or less complex extrusions. The sheer size of Anaconda's operation increases the possibility of your finding just the shape you want, from stock. And if you really do need a way-out, right-off-the-beaten-track special—then Anaconda are still very happy to make it for you.

So you want it pretty? Coppermetals are just that.

Beauty is an accidental by-product with Anaconda. Colours of Anaconda coppermetals range from deep copper, through a treasure-house of golds, to a shimmering silver. Perhaps not the most important aspect of raw material selection—but if you want colour, Anaconda have it.

Want to know more? Ask the Canadian authority on coppermetals.

VITAL PART...
better make it
FORGED!

When much is expected of a part, great strength, high resistance to shock, long service with complete reliability — all without undue bulk, and at an economical cost — forging is the method.

The forging process develops the maximum mechanical properties in a material — greater values in these properties than are obtainable by any other metalworking process.

Allow a Dominion Forge engineer to evaluate your requirements. As one of the largest forging manufacturers in Canada we are geared for massive quantities for the automotive industry as well as a small industry's requirement.

BRONZE
BEARIUM

Even where water must be used as the only lubricant, BEARIUM METAL does not seize or score the shaft. The reason is that BEARIUM METAL, because of its superior frictional properties, is self-lubricating. Secret of its amazing performance is due to the uniform distribution of microscopic particles of lead within the copper-tin grains rather than between the grain boundaries as found in ordinary bronzes. So if you have a bearing requirement which calls for dependable, trouble-free performance—then BEARIUM METAL is your best buy in bearing bronze.

Non-Seizing and Non-Scoring . . . Long Life . . . High Compressive Strength . . . Self-Lubricating . . . Low Coefficient of Friction . . . resistant to Shock Loads . . . Sound, Uniform Structure . . . Free-Cutting.

Available in rough cast bars, individual castings and completely machined parts.

Is Canada a good source of manufactured goods?

Businessmen in 138 countries say "yes."

Last year they imported $7,200 million worth of manufactured items from Canada. Over $1,200 million more than the year before.

Which proves that Canada's booming, progressive secondary industries have plenty to offer. At fair prices. And backed by good service.

What sort of things? Run through the alphabet. Aircraft . . . Bearings . . . Control instruments . . . Disc harrows . . . Electronic equipment. Carry right on to Woodworking machinery . . . X-Ray installations . . . Yachts . . . Zippers. And many more in between.

FOREWORD

By Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin
Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce

The growth of Canada's exports in 1968 was in absolute terms by far the largest ever achieved, and in percentage terms the largest of the past 17 years. As a result, Canada recorded its first billion-dollar merchandise trade surplus ever experienced in a peace-time year. Two contemporary economic trends are evident:

Canada's gross national product, since 1960, has risen at an average annual rate of eight per cent while the rate of increase of our merchandise exports in the same period averaged more than 12 per cent. On the other hand, while exports of basic foodstuffs and crude materials increased by about 85 per cent in the past eight years, exports of fully manufactured products grew more than six-fold.

Members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are to be commended for their contribution to these important trends. Indeed, manufacturing and processing industries now account for nearly three-quarters of our total exports. The C.M.A., in close co-operation with Government, has effectively promoted the development of secondary products suitable for both the domestic and the foreign markets.

It is to this sector that we must look for major economic gains.

Recognition of the essential relationship between industrial development and export promotion is clearly reflected in the objectives of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

If we want to keep our domestic and foreign markets and win new markets, we must produce competitively products that are in demand. Conversely, to produce competitive products we need total markets, domestic and foreign. In other words, we must work toward economies of scale.

It is a key responsibility of the new Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to assist manufacturing and processing industries to adapt to changes in technology and to changing conditions in domestic and export markets, as a means of encouraging the rationalization and restructuring of their facilities in order to achieve this goal. This is consistent with the intention of providing both business and Government with a full and balanced range of services in the industrial and trade development fields.

The integrated Department will enable the business community to reduce the number of points of contact it must maintain with Government and so increase the efficiency of its liaison.

The Canadian Trade Index is one of the most valuable reference publications on Canadian industry. It is a prime example of the C.M.A.'s concern for the manufacturers' needs.

The concise description of export methods and practices prefaces an invaluable repository of product and company information. The C.M.A. justly deserves the gratitude of Canadian businessmen for making available to foreign buyers this excellent sourcing reference.

EXPORTING IS A CHALLENGE

Foreign trade is one of the pillars of Canadian prosperity, and offers a challenge to enterprising firms engaged in the production of commodities for which markets may be found in other countries. Canada is in fourth position among trading nations of the world, and the preservation of her stable economy depends to a large extent on the ability to export the products of her factories, fields, fisheries, forests and mines.

As more than one-fifth of the Gross National Product consists of goods and services supplied to other lands, it is readily apparent that a large proportion of Canada's population is engaged, directly or indirectly, in foreign trade. During the last thirty-five years, there has been a gradual shift in the composition of our exports from raw to processed materials. As a result, goods classed as crude materials represented only about 19 per cent of total domestic exports in 1968, food, feed, beverages and tobacco about 12 per cent, while fabricated and end products made up almost 68 per cent of the total.

Export trade yields the best returns to firms that maintain continuity of supply. Experience has shown that those most likely to succeed are engaged in a well-established domestic trade, and have an assured production which permits them to create a favourable reputation and develop a demand for their products in other lands.

Experience is the prime requisite for any individual embarking on export trade, followed by capital. The latter may be dissipated rapidly without the former. Foreign tariff and import restrictions, transportation procedures, currency and finance problems, and packaging and documentation are a few of the shoals on which such a venture into uncharted waters may founder. Capital is necessary to tide over the intervals between the time services are rendered or shipments made and the time payments are received. It is also necessary to meet unexpected demands that may be experienced. However, with the wide variety of assistance and guidance readily available to businessmen, the problems are not as complex as is sometimes feared.

Prospective exporters might well consider the following fundamental questions before embarking on what can prove to be a rewarding voyage of discovery:

Does our business lend itself to export, or are the products we manufacture suited only to the domestic market?

Does the capacity of our plant meet the domestic and possible foreign demand for our product? What proportion of our output can be made available for shipment abroad on a continuing basis?

What countries are now purchasing products similar to those being manufactured in our plant?

What is the volume of their purchases, and their sources of supply?

Are these items being imported because they are not being produced in the countries concerned, or because of a temporary shortage? If similar products are being made in the countries where a consumer demand exists, are local manufacturers protected by a tariff on imports, by import quotas, or by some other device?

Does some special feature of the Canadian product provide a marketing and merchandising advantage in other countries?

Are payment problems likely to be experienced due to a shortage of dollars?

Are carrier services adequate with transportation costs sufficiently low to overcome possible domestic competition and competition from other countries?

Are products of a bulk and value ratio which could best move via air freight? Negotiation of commodity rates for recurring shipments is possible.

Which markets have a growth potential?

What Canadian firms are presently exporting to the countries concerned, and are Canadian products highly regarded there?

Are there any Canadian export regulations that apply to the products it is proposed to export?

Export trade has national significance. It involves a live interest in the countries concerned, courtesy in the transaction of business with overseas customers, integrity, and a continuity of vigorous service, which contribute to the creation of a favourable reputation for the firm and its representatives. Goodwill engendered by one or more Canadian companies also leads to the development of friendly relations with Canada.

IMPORTANT POINTS FOR SUCCESSFUL EXPORTING

1. Make firm long-term export plans.
2. Manufacture and supply the right product for the market.
3. Institute a simple and logical system of costing for exports.
4. Offer reasonable credit terms.
5. Employ personnel who are experienced in export and travel and who know the languages.
6. Visit customers through regular trips overseas, and do not attempt to organize exports solely from the desk in the home office.
7. Support your product and your visits to customers abroad with attractive multi-lingual promotional literature and advertising.
8. Use the right approach in your overseas dealings; acquaint yourself with local conditions and customs; make your contacts in a friendly manner; diligently avoid the "hard sell" approach.
9. Never commit yourself to an arrangement you cannot fulfil. Nothing does more harm than to fail to live up to undertakings on prices, or on deliveries and servicing of export customers.
10. Exhibit at trade fairs abroad.

HOW TO EXPORT

Export is not mererly an extension of domestic trade. Each market has its own peculiarities in taste, customs and business methods. A full understanding of the basics of export is therefore necessary, and an appreciation of the problems of your overseas customers needed.

On the following pages some of the principles and methods to be employed in the export trade are outlined. Expert assistance is yours merely for the asking at every stage of the export business. Later in this section you will be acquainted, in detail, with the export services available from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The material following is not meant to serve as a comprehensive manual of export practices. Its primary purpose is to indicate broadly some of the matters to which the exporter, or prospective exporter, should give serious consideration.

EXPORT DISTRIBUTION AND MARKETING

By Ivan E. Lenard, M.I.Ex., Executive Director, International Patented Products.

Export business can be undertaken and organized in many ways. Usually, the penetration of foreign markets will start with shipments abroad from the Canadian plant. Later on, perhaps, the nature and volume of business might justify manufacturing abroad, either under license or by direct investment in factories located abroad.

The first step therefore is to obtain market information. It is essential to obtain accurate background information about the markets where business is contemplated. Market surveys can take many forms, depending on the information required. They vary from the most simple questionnaires covering such basic matters as: import restrictions; prevailing local prices; volume of current business, etc.; to highly specialized surveys to establish precise detailed information.

Basic data required in the initial stages leading to decisions as to whether business is possible, can be supplied through many channels, including the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the chartered banks, etc. To provide information for more sophisticated market surveys requires either personal visits to the market or the services of foreign trade consultants, international market survey organizations and in some cases a combination of all.

The results of the market survey should also determine the best methods to be employed for obtaining maximum distribution. Distribution methods will vary considerably, depending on the characteristics of the market, as well as the product involved. In some large European countries, or nations the size of India, it is usually desirable to deal with separate areas as individual market units within the total territory. These considerations might also arise in smaller countries, although in most cases it is possible to locate companies which can offer national distribution for most products.

There are several types of organization which should be considered before definite marketing plans are decided upon. Some of the better recognized export distribution organizations are: export agents or brokers located in Canada; commission agents; importer-wholesalers; distributors.

Export Agents or Brokers Located in Canada

Most of the major centres of Canada have a number of companies specialized in export distribution. These companies vary from large international trading organizations, specializing in a few products, to companies dealing with a wide variety of merchandise. In some cases these organizations purchase for their own account and pay cash on delivery in Canada for all transactions, while others develop business on a commission or fee basis.

Some of these companies specialize in certain markets only, while others have connections in most important export markets. Some have their own offices abroad but in most cases export companies in Canada employ local agents abroad. By representing a number of Canadian exporters they are in a position to spread travel and other expenses, thus enabling the Canadian manufacturer to benefit from lower overhead expenses, as well as specialized export knowledge. In most cases credit risks are either completely eliminated or reduced to the absolute minimum. Export agents can also cut down on transportation expenses by combining shipments and thus obtaining the most favourable freight rates.

There are also a number of export companies in Canada operating as combination export managers. Such companies act for the manufacturer as his own export department would do. Doing export work for a number of manufacturers, overhead expenses are shared and the manufacturer does not have to employ export staff of his own.

Commission Agents

Most countries offer a large number of organizations who represent foreign companies on a commission basis. These companies act as the manufacturer's own sales staff. In small countries these companies will handle a wide variety of products. In larger countries and more complex marketing territories, these companies become highly specialized in the types of goods they handle. In some European and Latin American countries, specialization reaches a high degree, whereby a commission agent in textiles, for example, will deal only in printed cotton goods.

Commission agencies vary considerably in size. They might be one-man operations, or they could employ over 100 salesmen of their own. In most cases, the established firms in the country have wide connections in the trade. They are very familiar with the basic requirements of the market. They sell direct to wholesalers, or in some cases direct to retailers, and expect to be reimbursed with a commission already included in the price offered to their customers. Rates of commission will fluctuate from a fraction of one percent to as much as 15% or 20%, depending on the product involved, the established customs in the trade and the functions the commission agent is expected to perform.

Depending on the arrangements concluded, the commission agent might be prepared to bear all costs of advertising, or leave such expenses to the manufacturer. In some cases the agent will be responsible for credit, while in other agreements all credit risks are to be the concern of the exporter. In the latter case, the exporter has the right to confirm or reject orders received from the commission agent.

Importers-Wholesalers

In many countries there are companies who purchase for their own account and offer distribution throughout the area in which they operate. In some small countries these organizations can offer national distribution but in larger countries, they will restrict their activities to a very specific marketing area. In general one can expect a reasonably high degree of specialization. These companies also employ a number of salesmen and sell direct to retail outlets. It is not uncommon for such companies to have a chain of retail outlets of their own, in addition to selling to other retailers in the trade.

Purchases will be made for the importer's own account and in such cases it is quite customary for the importer-wholesaler to undertake some advertising. Advertising and point of sale promotion expenses might be exclusively for the importer's account, or the exporter might allow for a promotion arrangement based on volume or some other consideration.

As a general rule, these companies expect to be appointed on an exclusive basis for a definite period of time. If most of the advertising is for the exporter's account, it might be possible to make non-exclusive arrangements. These companies can be expected to provide full service if the product involved requires some maintenance or periodic replacement of parts.

Distributors

The function of distributors differs greatly from country to country and from product to product. In general, distributors import direct only after the line has already been well introduced and offers reasonable turnover. In most cases distributors will not undertake direct advertising but will be active in the sales promotion field. This type of organization will engage in the highest degree of specialization and offers opportunities for the deepest market penetration. Exclusivity in clearly defined marketing areas might, in some cases, be requested, although it is not uncommon to be able to deal with most, if not all, distributors in the trade.

Except in most unusual cases, credit terms will be requested. These will vary in length of time, depending on general economic conditions prevalent in the country. Some distributors expect a fair proportion of their inventory to be financed by the exporter.

While the clearly defined marketing facilities outlined above are based on generalization, in many countries some of these functions tend to overlap. A combination of functions can be attained for some products in some markets. Each case should be closely examined and all factors carefully analyzed before binding commitments are agreed upon. In some countries the laws offer definite protection to local agents and make it extremely difficult to make changes in agency arrangements.

In general a commission agent or importer might be prepared to restrict his activities to the products of one manufacturer only in the field, particularly when the arrangement is of an exclusive nature. Distributors on the other hand will likely handle competitive products as well.

Often local manufacturers are prepared to act for the sale of allied products not manufactured by themselves. Such arrangements can lead to subsequent licensing agreements for manufacturing in the country involved. The advantages of dealing with an allied local manufacturer could be considerable and should lead to exchange of technical information, product development, etc.

Packing and Packaging

It is the responsibility of the exporter to see to it that goods shipped abroad arrive in good condition. Facilities for loading and unloading differ greatly in many ports of the world. In most cases today vessels can unload alongside, although there are still many important ports in the world where cargo must be lightered. Under any circumstances allowance must be made for adequate packing before the goods leave the manufacturer. To some extent the extra cost of heavy packing, where necessary, may be offset by the high local resale value of packing material. (See also comments under "Shipping and Marine Insurance.")

Air cargo is becoming a most important factor in foreign trade. Savings can be instituted, not only by elimination of heavy packing, but also by reducing local inventory costs through the shortening of the supply line.

Local tastes and preferences should be carefully considered in packaging. Wherever possible, printing should be in the language of the country of destination. Some countries impose a package tax when goods are landed and these considerations could be of utmost importance in meeting existing competition.

Sales Training

One of the most difficult problems facing the exporter is to provide adequate training to the people abroad who are expected to sell his product. The problem becomes multiplied when the product involved requires a degree of technical background and after-sales service. Difficulties in translating installation or service literature also tend to complicate the picture.

Some companies solve this problem by inviting key personnel of overseas representatives to spend some time in Canada and obtain the necessary technical background first hand. Such trained personnel are then expected to educate sales and service staff locally. The cost of such training is usually borne by the exporter. Other companies employ travelling company representatives who do the training abroad. Travelling service representatives, on the payroll of the manufacturer, can also fill a most useful function.

The importance of clearly worded technical literature in the local language cannot be overemphasized. In certain cases it is possible to have technical instructions permanently marked on the product in question and these should be, wherever possible, in the local language or dialect.

Training of Home Office Export Personnel

Export trade is becoming more and more the function of specialists. It is commonly believed that it is better to have an export specialist than a person very familiar with the product to be sold abroad. This is based on the theory that the export specialist will be able to obtain the necessary product knowledge more rapidly than would be the case in reverse.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association offers helpful facilities for the training of export personnel through the monthly meetings organized by its Export Study Clubs in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. (See comments under Export Services of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.)

FINANCING EXPORTS

By Edward R. Ernst,
Bank of Montreal.
General Manager,
International Banking.

The major portion of Canada's foreign trade is financed and facilitated by the chartered banks under arrangements with their foreign branches and correspondent banks abroad. This system provides Canadian importers and exporters with a smooth-working efficient banking service at reasonable cost. Besides making outright advances against bills of exchange supported by documents of title covering both incoming and outgoing shipments, banks in Canada offer their customers a comprehensive range of financial and information facilities. Such services have been developed throughout the years to meet demands created by the steady growth of Canada's foreign trade.

In addition to financing the Canadian trader, an important share of our export trade is financed for foreign banks on a sight or short-term basis. In these cases, the Canadian exporter receives payment upon presentation of specified documents to the Canadian bank concerned, the latter relying upon receipt of settlement in due course from its correspondent bank.

Foreign Departments

All the Canadian banks have well-established administrative foreign or international departments in their head offices to deal with the many problems presented by international trade and payments in a constantly changing world. This reservoir of up-to-date information on political and economic conditions in every country of consequence is readily available to customers anywhere in Canada through a network of branches. As well as furnishing a comprehensive range of information facilities, including advice on financing procedures, these departments enable branches to ease the day-to-day problems of Canadian traders in many respects. The functions and operations of these head office departments have been augmented from time to time to meet the changing needs of those engaged in foreign trade in all parts of Canada. Our Bank, for instance, has sent representatives periodically to practically every part of the world since the last war to gather information at first hand to improve our services to the public.

Credit Risks

In export trade, as in the domestic market, the seller must assess the credit risk and quote terms of sale accordingly. In foreign trade, however, the normal risk must be considered in conjunction with the financial standing of the country of destination. The buyer may be perfectly willing and able to pay in his own currency, but, if his country suffers from a chronic shortage of foreign exchange, and particularly of dollars, the Canadian supplier may be faced with lengthy delay in obtaining settlement. He may even suffer outright loss.

Where buyers and sellers have an inter-company relationship or are otherwise well and favourably known to each other, and where there are no serious exchange transfer difficulties, exports are often arranged on an open account or consignment basis. Such sales are generally settled by mail or cable transfers through banking media and present no particular financing problems. These transactions are known as clean payments, and a large volume of these payments is handled daily by Canadian banks on instructions from correspondent banks around the world. Cash with the order is another relatively simple and effective method of settlement. This procedure is, however, seldom used in these highly competitive days.

The Documentary Draft

A large and growing proportion of Canadian export trade is financed by means of sight or time drafts drawn by shippers on buyers abroad. Such drafts are known as bills of exchange. They are usually accompanied by documents of title consisting of commercial and customs invoices, marine insurance policy or certificate, and a full set of ocean bills of lading, made out to the order of shipper and endorsed in blank — or, in other words, in negotiable form. In the case of sight drafts, these documents are normally released to importers only against payment, but when thirty-day or longer-time drafts are used, surrender of documents usually takes place solely on the strength of the importer's written acceptance on the face of the bill. In every instance the exporter must supply his bank with complete collection and settlement instructions.

The export may be financed by discount of the relative bill of exchange at the exporter's bank at time of shipment. Alternatively, the bill could be handed to the bank with instructions to collect before making settlement. Still another financing procedure is for the Canadian exporter to pledge the bill to his bank as partial or full security for a general line of credit.

Principle of Documentary Drawings

The basic principle behind documentary drawings is the fact that the seller is satisfied to start the goods on their journey before they are paid for, but he wants to be assured of payment before they actually pass into the physical possession of his customer. If the bill is drawn payable at so many days after sight or date, the buyer's written acceptance definitely establishes his obligation (but not necessarily his ability) to pay at a fixed maturity date. Apart from the exchange conversion feature, which is a serious factor in some countries, the main risk in use of document draft procedure is that the buyer may refuse or be financially unable to honour the drawing. Where the draft has been drawn at sight, dishonour usually results in expensive warehousing and other costs for the seller, pending disposal of the goods to another buyer, possibly at a substantial loss. The drawer's position in regard to non-payment at maturity of an accepted time draft is even more insecure, because the goods have already passed into the hands of the buyer and probably have been disposed of to third parties. Costly legal proceedings, followed by partial if not complete loss, are often the result.

It is, therefore, evident that Canadian exporters should be fully satisfied not only with the reliability of buyers but also that foreign exchange resources and general economic conditions in the country of import will permit prompt settlement. Reports on the credit-worthiness and general reputation of foreign firms may be obtained by airmail or cable through your own bank anywhere in Canada. Similarly, the branch of the bank you deal with has ready access to the latest foreign economic and other practical information available at the international department of its head office.

The Bank Act

The financing of Canada's exports not only covers the period between shipment of goods and final settlement from abroad but also begins at the first stages of domestic production. Under the provisions of Sections 86 to 90 of the Canadian Bank Act, the chartered banks are enabled to provide a large volume of short-term working capital to industry and commerce. The purpose is to facilitate the complete series of operations, from processing of raw material to finished product and to eventual disposal of surplus production in markets abroad. In fact, these sections of the Bank Act, which had their origin in "an Act granting additional facilities in commercial transactions" passed by the Parliament of the old Province of Canada in 1859, constitute the very backbone of our industrial production financing and, in turn, have an important bearing on the flow of our export trade.

Commercial Letters of Credit

The history of commercial letters of credit dates back to the earliest days of banking. Their origin is credited to Roman and Lombard money-changers who also are believed to have introduced the bill of exchange. While there are various definitions of letters of credit, the following one, I think, most aptly describes the purpose of the instrument: "A bank issuing a letter of credit furnishes its credit, which is both good and well known, instead of the buyer's credit, which may be good but is not so well known". The wording of definitions may differ but the basic fact remains that the establishing bank gives its own undertaking to pay to sellers stated sums of money against delivery of certain documents within a prescribed time.

Commercial or documentary letters of credit may be issued in various forms but, generally speaking, they fall into two main categories:—

IRREVOCABLE CREDITS, which constitute a binding and irrevocable obligation on the part of the establishing bank to honour drawings issued in conformity with terms of the credit. Such credits may not be cancelled or altered without the consent of all parties concerned. The Canadian bank through which the credit has been forwarded will add the following clause on the relative advice to the beneficiary:—

> "This letter is solely an advice of credit opened by the above mentioned correspondent and conveys no engagement by us."

It is the practice, however, of many Canadian exporters to require the written assurance or firm undertaking of a bank in Canada that credits issued by a foreign bank will be honoured in due course. For instance, the issuing bank abroad may not be well known to the Canadian beneficiary or perhaps the importing country has a difficult exchange position which conceivably could interfere with performance of the issuing bank's undertaking. Provided, of course, it is instructed to do so by its foreign correspondent, the Canadian advising bank then asumes complete responsibility for the credit by adding the following undertaking to its letter of advice to the beneficiary:—

> "We hereby confirm this credit and thereby undertake that any drafts drawn and accompanied by documents in order will be duly honoured upon presentation."

REVOCABLE CREDITS, otherwise known as "Authority to Pay" or "Authority to Purchase". These instruments authorize payment to the beneficiary upon presentation of draft and specified documents — subject, however, to modification or cancellation without notice to the beneficiary. Such credits serve mainly as a means of arranging payment and afford the exporter very little protection. They are used infrequently and only where sellers have implicit confidence in the buyer's ability and willingness to carry out terms of sales contracts. The wording of these credits and any relative letters of advice should include this clause:—

> "This credit is subject to revocation or modification at any time without notice to you."

Uses of Letters of Credit

The importance of commercial letters of credit and their usefulness generally in world trade warrants more detailed mention of their functions and use. First, it should be clearly understood that they deal with documents but not goods. Neither the negotiating bank in Canada nor the issuing bank abroad can accept any responsibility whatsoever for the quality or other characteristics of the underlying goods, but they must ensure only that the documents are made out strictly in accordance with the terms of the credit. It follows that the importer should satisfy himself thoroughly through his bank of the general standing and reputation of the exporter before placing the order. Second, even an irrevocable credit offers limited, if any, protection to the exporter, who is unable to meet the terms of the credit in every respect. If discrepancies occur in documents which cannot be corrected in time for delivery and the exporter furnishes the negotiating bank with a guarantee he has, in effect, automatically signed away his rights under the credit. In other words, the foreign importer if he chose could refuse to take delivery of the documents because they did not agree with his requirements as outlined in the credit. It is easy to imagine what might happen if there had been a sharp drop in the price of the goods following placement of the order.

Canada now subscribes to a code of procedure governing commercial letters of credit transactions known as the "Uniform Customs and Practice for Commercial Documentary Credits." The United States and many other countries have operated under this code for years, with Canada and most other countries in the Commonwealth adopting the code recently. Also, the National Foreign Trade Council Inc., New York, have issued a useful pamphlet containing definitions of trade terms and abbreviations.

The Foreign Exchange Risk

If the exporter sells for Canadian dollars, the exchange risk falls on the foreign importer, but if payment is to be made in the currency of the importer's country, the prudent exporter will protect himself against exchange rate fluctuations between the time of sale and of settlement. This he can do by selling a future to his bank for delivery at the approximate time the foreign funds are due for payment. An uncovered exchange position could easily cost an exporter not only his trading profit on the goods but a substantial loss besides.

EXPORT PRICING

By Richard B. Spiro, former Vice-President, International Division, The Canadian Coleman Company, Limited.

The subject of export pricing embraces the principles of price calculation and the method of quotation. The former is of prime importance in establishing prices which will be competitive in the foreign market, while still allowing an adequate return to the exporter in terms of contributing to the profit of his overall operation. The latter is concerned with the necessity for quoting in such a way that the overseas customer can readily calculate his landed cost and compare it with competitive offerings; in short, it makes it easy for him to buy.

Calculation of Export Prices

While export prices will necessarily bear a fairly close relationship to domestic prices, and will perhaps need adjustment in the light of prices of competitive merchandise, the theoretically correct method is to calculate prices based on the actual cost of producing, selling and shipping the goods, providing, in addition, for the coverage of general overhead expenses and an adequate net profit.

These costs may be divided into three general classifications:

(1) Direct materials and labour (at standard or normal costs applicable to the product being offered, less drawback of duties paid on imported components or raw materials).

(2) Factory overhead (which should be calculated and apportioned on the basis of the average of the plant capacity occupied in the production of goods for export).

(3) Sales and general overhead.

In every business there are many items of cost which are not especially attributable to any particular phase of the operation, but which must be covered if the business is to operate at all. In tabulating costs for export purposes, every effort should be made to eliminate those costs which do not bear any direct relation to the export operation. The examination can be made particularly searching in those businesses where export sales form only a small proportion of total sales.

The expenses of the export operation itself will include such items as: Export department salaries, travelling expenses, catalogues and promotional literature, export advertising, commissions to travellers and to representatives abroad, transportation to the agreed point of delivery (see below), packing and shipping materials and labour, legal expenses, patents and trademark fees, office supplies, postage and cables, taxes, rent, insurance, interest and exchange, provision for bad debts, etc. The tabulation of the expenses and the preparation of a budgetary Profit and Loss Statement will permit the export executive to arrive at quotations based on factory cost by indicating the percentage mark-up which must be added to factory cost to cover the expenses of the export operations and to produce the desired margin of net profit.

Fixed and Variable Costs

In the analysis of costs and expenses it will be found that certain items will be characterized as fixed charges and are independent of production or sales volume. Others vary directly and automatically with the volume of goods produced and sold, while a third variety may be described as controllable and bears a more or less direct relation to the volume of business. Examples of "fixed" charges are civic taxes, administration, rent, etc. Charges which vary in direct ratio to volume include direct labour and materials, commissions, etc. In the third category are such items as export advertising, travelling expenses, clerical costs, etc.

In a market where very keen competition is being faced, a careful examination of the relationships between these cost categories may be the means of determining whether a price can be quoted which will be competitive, or in other words, whether an export order can be obtained at all. In many organizations, export business represents only a comparatively small percentage of the total turnover and, in such cases, it may be argued that, where necessary, an export price which covers the variable and controllable export costs but disregards all or a portion of the fixed charges will still be profitable from the point of view of the overall operation. In such an organization, it may be assumed that the fixed expenses will be the same whether or not this export business is added to the domestic business. The export order, so obtained, is therefore a means of employing plant capacity, which may not otherwise be profitably engaged, and to absorb a portion, though not by domestic standards its full share, of the fixed expenses of the business.

If, however, export business represents more than, say 15% to 20% of the total turnover, it may be clearly impossible to charge the whole of the fixed expenses of the organization against that part of the production which is sold in the domestic market, as this may price these products out of the domestic market.

Price Quotations and Foreign Trade Terms

A significant factor in the quotation of prices is the cost of transporting the goods to the point of delivery indicated in the sales contract. This point is designated by certain internationally accepted "foreign trade terms."

The foreign trade terms indicate the geographic point in the line of connection between seller and buyer up to which the seller pays all transportation and insurance costs (or in other words, includes transportation and insurance costs in his quotation) and from which point onwards the buyer pays all transportation or insurance costs (or in other words, from which point onwards the seller adds transportation and insurance costs to his quotation in case he, acting on behalf of the buyer, prepays these expenses). The foreign trade terms further define in the line of connection between seller and buyer the point of delivery, which means the point up to which the seller holds title to the goods and is therefore responsible for them as far as damages, losses, etc., are concerned and where the title then passes from the seller to the buyer, who from this point onwards is responsible for any losses or damages.

As one proceeds along this line of connection from the seller to the buyer, it will progressively become easier for the buyer to calculate his landed costs. If one quotes, for instance, "F.O.B. Factory", which is often called "ex works", then the buyer, in order to arrive at his landed costs, would not only have to figure out his import Customs Duty, the landing charges in his own port of arrival, the ocean freight and marine insurance, but he would also have to know the inland transport in the country of supply such as for instance, the cost of transporting the merchandise from Winnipeg to Montreal; it is quite clear that it would be difficult for the importer in a far-away country to obtain information on the cost of inland rail transport in Canada, which, in the case of an "F.O.B. Factory" or "ex works" quotation would be necessary to permit him to figure out his landed costs. If we quote "F.A.S. Vessel" (Free Along Side) or "F.O.B. Vessel" (Free on Board Vessel) at a named Port of Sailing, then, in order to arrive at his landed costs, he would only have to know the ocean freight rate, marine insurance rate and the actual landing costs and Customs Duties which occur in his own country.

With competition becoming keener all the time and with exporters in other countries used to making it easy for their overseas customers to figure out their landed costs, it has become necessary to proceed in one's quotations along this line of connection between seller and buyer to points closer to the buyer, and to quote prices for delivery at the port of destination such as for instance: C & F (Cost and Freight, which would only leave to the buyer to figure out and pay the marine insurance premium); or: C.I.F. (which means Cost, Insurance excluding war risk insurance, and Freight); or C.I.F. & C. (which with the last letter "C" includes also the commission which the buyer may possibly pay to a buying house or broker whom he may employ in the country of supply); or, the quotation may even be: C.I.F.C. & I. (which with the last letter "I" indicates that also bank interest, in the case of extended credit terms, is included in the quotation and will not have to be added to the quoted price by the buyer).

Foreign Trade Terms—Definitions

In an effort to define in a uniform manner certain well known terms generally used in making price quotations, there has been developed in various countries a set of rules or definitions which have been adopted by certain trade organizations and others setting out in some detail the obligations of seller and buyer attaching to the particular terms. In the United States the National Foreign Trade Council Incorporated, the National Council of American Importers Incorporated, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America on July 30, 1941, through a joint committee, approved of what are known as "Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions — 1941." These follow in general, although not in detail, the International Rules for the Interpretation of Trade Terms — generally known as "Incoterms, 1953," defined by the International Chamber of Commerce. It should be understood that the use of such rules is optional and that the approval of the particular rules referred to by designated trade bodies does not lend to them the force of law. Nevertheless, where a price quotation in accordance with these definitions and a contract of sale is concluded with a statement that the price is subject to these definitions, it would have considerable force in determining what is understood by the parties to the contract in respect to such price quotation.

While specific reference has been made to the "Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions—1941" and to "Incoterms 1953," it is essential to bear in mind, as previously pointed out, that foreign trade definitions have been issued by organizations in various parts of the world and the courts of different countries have interpreted these definitions in different ways. To reduce the opportunities for misunderstanding to a minimum, therefore, it is fundamental that there be agreement between seller and buyer as to what is actually meant when a price quotation is made. A buyer in a foreign country who is familiar with definitions endorsed by an organization in the foreign country and the court decisions interpreting such definitions, on receiving a price quotation from a seller in Canada is constrained to construe it in the light of such definition unless the quotation is clarified by a stipulation as to what definitions apply in making the price quotation.

In addition to the commonly used terms, there are many others, some of which are found in particular trades only. Where definitions are not formally approved and adopted by trade organizations for general use, it is necessary that a seller and buyer should specify exactly what is understood in respect thereto, indicating the obligations of both parties so that there may be no misunderstanding. In respect to "C.I.F." contracts, it further should be pointed out that the International Law Association adopted certain rules relating thereto in 1928 which, as later modified in 1931, are known as the "Warsaw-Oxford Rules."

An extensive list of technical abbreviations used in foreign trade and exchange transactions is given in Appendix II.

SHIPPING AND MARINE INSURANCE

In the conduct of export trade it is essential that meticulous care be exercised in understanding and complying with the requirements of the buyer and the importing country, as well as Canadian Government regulations where they apply. Mistakes and misunderstandings can be costly, and, because of the distances involved, can give rise to lengthy delays. This is more fully developed in the comments appearing under the caption "Documentation".

It is equally important that careful consideration be given to the packing of the goods. Packing must be strong enough to withstand the stresses to which such shipments are exposed in the numerous handlings and stowage in the ship's hold, and thus protect the contents against physical and chemical damage, as well as against pilferage, but at the same time should be designed so as not to unnecessarily increase the cost, including freight cost. Containerization, whereby the goods are enclosed in a transferable box, often owned by the carrier, which when emptied is utilized further in transportation, is a packaging mode that is receiving greater attention. The marking of the packages or pieces should be durable in character and should be such as to properly identify and aid in the carriage of the shipment to its destination.

Care should also be exercised in the selection of the transportation routing, and in properly describing the goods in the bill of lading to assure that the most favourable ocean rate may be applied.

There are frequent year-round sailings from Canadian Eastern and Western Seaboard ports to most foreign countries. There are also direct sailings from a number of ports on the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes to many overseas ports during the season of St. Lawrence - Great Lakes navigation, roughly from the middle of April to the end of November.

Ocean carriers enjoy immunity from liability for loss or damage caused by perils of the seas and a wide range of risks under the statutes of many maritime countries and the conditions of carriage embodied in the ocean bill of lading. Marine insurance, which is designed to afford protection to those having an interest in the goods, against perils from which the ocean carrier is relieved from liability is, therefore, an indispensable adjunct of ocean commerce. Cargo coverage is a specialized field which can not be described here except in a very cursory manner. There are three main types of cargo coverage available—F.P.A. (Free of Particular Average); W.P.A. (With Particular Average); and "All Risks" (i.e. all physical loss or damage from external causes), together with many variations of these three main forms of coverage which are employed in insuring particular cargoes. It is important for the foreign trader to realize that a marine insurance policy is a valued policy and that the value declared should be of such amount that in the event of a casualty, the assured will be fully reimbursed for the losses sustained. War risks and the inclusion of coverage against losses resulting from strikes, riots and civil commotion are not embraced in a marine policy but may be added thereto by endorsement or issuance of a separate policy. If it is desired to have insurance attach from time the shipment leaves the exporter's factory to the time of its arrival at the premises of the consignee, this may be arranged by the addition of "Marine Extension Clauses" to the policy so as to afford protection from "warehouse to warehouse".

Export shipments may be insured under a specific policy issued for a particular shipment, or an exporter may arrange for a floating policy to cover all his shipments properly declared through a copy of the individual insurance certificate sent to the Insurance Company. Various other clauses are available to meet the particular requirements of the assured, and it is consequently necessary that the underwriter have full knowledge of the insurance buyer's marketing practices and trading methods in order that a marine policy may be "tailor made" to afford satisfactory protection. This usually can be arranged whether the insurance buyer's interest is of a direct or contingent nature. The exporter should accordingly consult a reliable marine insurance broker in order to obtain a policy which best suits his particular needs and the requirements of his customer abroad.

In recent years there has been a considerable expansion in international air freight services which has been stimulated by technological advancement particularly apparent in such areas as carrying capacity, speed, handling and terminal services. This mode of carriage has succeeded in attracting progressively larger volumes of cargo in the development of overseas markets for products which, if dependent upon older surface means of transport, would probably never have materialized. This mode of expedited transportation is especially appealing to exporters of valuable or seasonal merchandise, perishable products, repair parts and traffic of an emergency nature requiring fast despatch, but its attractions apply to an ever increasing range of other products. While air freight charges are normally much higher than charged by surface carriers for the preponderance of overseas traffic, the freight in many cases is only one factor to be considered in determining the over-all distribution costs. Frequently there are offsetting advantages in the use of this mode of carriage, such as less expensive packing, reduced inventory charges, lower insurance costs and other less tangible benefits which may make it profitable to use air crago service.

The liability of the air carriers is limited in amount and to the negligence of itself, its servants, agents and employees, acting within the scope of their authority. All risk insurance may be arranged through the carrier or an insurance company.

DOCUMENTATION

In preparing the documentation for export shipments there are two principal considerations to be borne in mind, accuracy and time. In all aspects of export trade it is essential that care be taken in meticulously meeting the requirements of the buyer and the regulations of the importing country. Errors and irregularities may result in heavy fines or the assessment of excessive rates of duty in the importing country. In addition to the requirements of the country of destination the exporter should take care to ensure that the documents provided are in accordance with the terms of the letter of credit, where payment is being made by this means. In some instances documents that are not required by the customs authority of the importing country are specified in the letter of credit and if they are not correctly provided it may be difficult or impossible for the exporter to receive payment. The second consideration is that ample time should be allowed for the preparation of documents prior to the required date of shipment. Often printed forms have to be secured from consulates, completed and submitted to the consulate for visé and considerable delays can result should the consul not be available when the documents are submitted or if, for example, they are presented on a national holiday of the consul's country.

There are several documents required for most overseas shipments, each of which is a study in itself:

(a) Ocean Bill of Lading — which may be a Straight Bill authorizing delivery of the goods to the named consignee, or an Order Bill which requires presentation of a negotiable original in order to claim the shipment (may require legalization by the Consul of the country to which the goods are consigned);

In Air Cargo the Air Waybill is the instrument equivalent to the bill of lading.

(b) The Commercial Invoice (may require legalization by the Consul of the importing country, and may also require certification as to origin and value of the goods by a competent authority such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association);

(c) The Insurance Policy or Certificate;

(d) A draft or Bill of Exchange whose tenor reflects the terms of payment agreed between exporter and buyer;

(e) Customs Invoice or Certificate of Origin (Commonwealth countries);

(f) Consular Invoice and/or Certificate of Origin (for non-Commonwealth countries) which may be subject to certification by the Consul of the country concerned (many non-Commonwealth countries require, in addition, an endorsation or certificate as to origin and value of the goods, signed by a competent authority such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association);

(g) Packing list;

(h) Import License and/or Exchange Permit must, in the case of certain countries, be obtained from the importer and presented when applying for consular visa of customs documents. In the case of some countries it is sufficient if the number of the import license is indicated on all documents.

(i) As far as Canadian Government regulations are concerned, Export Entry Form B-13 is to be furnished for all commercial shipments and an Export Permit may be required depending upon the nature of the goods and the country of ultimate destination.

Where imported materials or parts are used in, wrought into, attached to, or consumed in the manufacture of articles in Canada, and such articles are subsequently exported, the Canadian Government allows a drawback of 99% of all duties and taxes paid on such imported materials or parts. The claim form is known as K-32 and, if the importer of the materials or parts is not the manufacturer claiming the drawback, it will be necessary for the latter to secure from the Canadian importer a certificate of importation and sale. There are certain documents that have to be presented with the claim for drawback, such as the export invoice and the export entry form. An extra copy of the latter (Form B-13) should be completed and handed to the transportation company or parcel post authorities along with the other copies, with a note thereon requesting that the Collector of Customs (at the last port from which the goods leave Canada) stamp, sign and return it to the exporter for export drawback purposes.

In all these matters, the exporter who is unfamiliar with the procedure or with the requirements of the market to which he is shipping should consult the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other expert advisers, and he may find it advisable to engage the services of a competent international freight forwarder. The Export Department of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association can supply members with summaries of the customs documentation requirements of any country, and time should be allowed to study these requirements well in advance of making a shipment.

FOREIGN LICENSING AGREEMENTS

For a variety of reasons arising from the growing industrialization of overseas markets and the increasing pressure of competition from third countries, a situation may be faced where the continuing export of finished goods becomes unprofitable. In these circumstances, the manufacturer may consider the desirability of starting a manufacturing operation abroad, perhaps through a foreign license agreement. Such an arrangement may produce a number of worthwhile results, such as a tactical advantage in the market concerned and in adjoining markets, the monetary return from the export of "know how", the mutual exchange of technical information with the licensee, and the possibility of a continued or increasing volume of exports of components. The operation of a foreign licensing programme involves a much lower capital commitment than direct investment in manufacturing facilities abroad, but there is correspondingly less control over the operation. Any such undertaking requires a most careful investigation and study, and the difficulties should not be under-estimated.

SOURCES OF REFERENCE

An exporter will find the accumulation of a small basic reference library an invaluable aid in the operation of an export department. In addition, a looseleaf system of references arranged alphabetically by countries will enable the export manager to keep current information on hand relating to the markets of specific interest to the company, with particular reference to its own products. Under each country the documentation requirements should be set out according to the various general divisions, namely: ocean freight, parcel post, rail, air parcel post, air cargo and express. Under these in turn should be listed the names of the customs documents and the data required for each. If possible, typical forms should be included in the loose-leaf book and, by way of example, information should be typed in under the various columns. Space should be reserved for amendments and from time to time as required the information should be reconsolidated. The date the information is compiled should be noted as well as the date of any amendments and their source. In this way the exporter will have a date to check from for documents in future shipments.

GOVERNMENT EXPORT SERVICES

Canadian firms and individuals interested in export trade may obtain guidance and assistance from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, including its corps of trade commissioners in seventy-four capitals and commercial centres around the world. The primary responsibility of its officers is to explore new avenues to the markets of all countries, and to keep the highways of trade in constant repair.

Commodity officers in Ottawa familiarize themselves with the operations of firms all across Canada and the nature of their products. Inquiries from Canadian trade commissioners abroad or other sources are channelled to Canadian firms able to meet the demand, along with available information concerning the prospective purchaser. They often urge participation in trade fairs or specialized trade shows, where it is believed the provision of a Canadian display will create a better understanding of products that can be sold in the country concerned on the basis of price, quality, continuity of supply and service.

New firms with an export potential should communicate with the Department, and furnish pertinent information on their operations and products, thereby enabling the commodity officer to determine their ability to compete in markets abroad. They are also urged to take part in trade fairs in which the Department plans to participate.

Other departmental officers are engaged in trade and tariff negotiations in an effort to create the most favourable atmosphere in which commercial transactions may be conducted. Close contacts are maintained with industry, with a view to the utilization of excess manufacturing capacity, the establishment of branch plants and the development of new products. Promotional literature is prepared, primarily for distribution at international trade fairs, and a wide range of information is made available to businessmen interested in export trade.

Commercial intelligence, which includes reviews of economic conditions in many lands, trade and tariff regulations, commodity requirements and industrial developments, is made available in Foreign Trade. This illustrated fortnightly magazine is published by the Department for the information of exporters and importers. A list of Canadian trade commissioners, showing their addresses is published in every third issue, while lists of commercial representatives of other countries in Canada appear at periodic intervals, together with lists of senior personnel at head office in Ottawa to whom inquiries can be directed.

Most of the articles in this magazine are written by trade commissioners in the field, who are familiar with markets in their territories and are well known in the principal business communities. Changes in import controls and other regulations are recorded, and trade notes that might suggest profitable export business appear in all issues.

The itineraries of trade commissioners on tour in Canada are published in Foreign Trade so that exporters and prospective exporters may communicate with them when these officers are in their immediate vicinity.

The Department's Trade Fairs Abroad Division co-ordinates participation in international trade fairs in other countries in order that the fullest advantage may be derived from the promotional effort of the Department, in co-operation with Canadian firms for whose products a market can be developed in the countries concerned.

Businessmen requiring guidance in their foreign trade transactions may communicate with trade commissioners, commodity officers with specialized knowledge of their particular products, tariff experts or other officers of the Department. One or more branches may be required to provide the necessary assistance in solving particular problems, and in securing a market for Canadian products. Inquiries directed to the Department or to an individual are funnelled to the branch best qualified to provide the desired service.

TRADE POLICY SERVICE

The Trade Policy Service has major responsibilities in the development and conduct of Canada's commerical policy and trade relations. The two trade policy offices, the Office of General Relations and the Office of Area Relations, follow closely commercial and economic developments at home and abroad with a view to furthering and safeguarding Canadian trade interests. In respect of trade and tariff negotiations detailed preparatory work is carried out through trade analysis and in consultation with the business community in order to expand export opportunities for Canadian products. This preparatory work is followed through in the direct process of negotiation with other countries. Close attention is paid to the conduct of Canadian trade with particular reference to Canada's rights and obligations under international agreements and arrangements. When Canadian trading interests are adversely affected or threatened by actions of other countries, appropriate remedial action is initiated. Such action includes efforts to find practical solutions to particular tariff problems, to obtain the liberalization of quantitative restrictions and, in general, to work for the removal of barriers to Canadian exports to other countries.

Office of General Relations

The Office of General Relations is responsible for the development of general trade policies and the pursuit of these policies in the conduct of Canada's multilateral trade relations. The Office is divided into four divisions, International Commodity Policies and Arrangements, International Financing, General Relations and Special Projects, and International Organizations.

General Relations and Special Projects, and International Organizations divisions are responsible for the formulation of general trade policy and for the advancing of Canadian trade interests in international organizations such as the GATT, UNCTAD, and OECD. International Financing Division develops policies for providing Canadian businessmen with competitive export credit and with opportunities to participate in development projects abroad. International Commodity Policies and Arrangements Division is responsible for the solution of specific commodity problems and for the negotiation and administration of international commodity agreements.

Office of Area Relations

The Office of Area Relations is responsible for the development and conduct of Canada's trade and commercial relations with particular countries and regional trading blocs. The Office provides immediate and direct service to Canadian exporters through initiating consultation with other governments on specific trade problems, and through supplying detailed and up-to-date information on foreign tariffs, import and exchange controls and other foreign regulations and restrictions affecting export sales of their products.

The five area divisions of this Office: the United States; Commonwealth; European; Asia and Middle East; and Latin American Divisions are the central points of contact with trade offices abroad. They also maintain general information on the economic situations and market conditions in the countries for which they are responsible and should, whenever possible, be consulted by Canadian businessmen before travelling abroad.

To assist Canadian firms in their export trade, the Office of Area Relations maintains complete and up to date information on customs regulations and tariffs, import and exchange controls, documentation requirements, sanitary marking and labelling regulations, and other regulations and requirements of other countries directly affecting trade. Details of these regulations are supplied on request. New measures in this field are publicized through the Department's official publication, Foreign Trade, and by bulletins.

Close contact is maintained between the two trade policy offices, with Industrial Policy, with other parts of the Department, with other government departments and agencies and with the representatives of Canadian producers, importers and industry associations. Often the Offices are called upon to participate in the formulation of Canadian programs, laws and regulations where the trade policy implications must be considered.

INDUSTRY SECTOR BRANCHES

There are nine industry sector branches in the Department: Chemicals; Electrical and Electronics; Agriculture; Fisheries and Food Products; Aerospace, Marine and Rail; Wood Products; Machinery; Materials; Apparel and Textiles and Mechanical Transport. These branches maintain liaison with the export community, advising of business opportunities abroad. They also keep Canada's trade commissioners informed of commodities available from Canadian exporters. Many of these functions are carried out by commodity officers, specialists in commodity trade, who are assigned to various divisions representing the major industrial and agricultural groups.

Officers of these branches ensure that export opportunities uncovered by the Department's promotional activities are made known to Canadian businessmen, and that exporters are aware of the services the Department offers. Commodity officers help to undertake a variety of specialized trade promotion programs. Included are plant visits and interviews, preparation of trade studies, market surveys, commodity and area development programs. In co-operation with the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission and the Promotion Projects Branch, the officers work on displays of Canadian products and services at international trade fairs. In addition, they accompany groups of Canadian businessmen abroad assessing the market potential of particular products as well as escorting foreign trade missions which come to Canada.

INDUSTRY AND TRADE SERVICES BRANCH

This branch provides various support services for trade and industry. It is composed of four divisions in addition to eight regional offices across Canada.

Export and Import Controls Division

This division has the responsibility for administering trade controls under the authority of the Export and Import Permits Act. These trade controls have been developed with the objective of controlling exports to ensure adequate domestic supply of scarce commodities; of controlling exports where the commodity or country of destination is such that the trade is considered detrimental to Canadian security; of controlling exports and imports to implement an intergovernmental arrangement or to ensure adequate supply and distribution of a commodity scarce in world markets.

Transportation Division

This division has the responsibility for the physical movement of goods, of safeguarding and improving transportation services in the conduct of Canada's trade and of assisting existing and potential exporters in identifying the most effective routes and beneficial rates for the shipment of their goods. A continuing analysis of the transportation environment for Canadian trade is carried on. Liaison with national and international transportation agencies, and participation in national and international trade forums to encourage an efficient transportation environment for Canadian trade are also this division's responsibility.

Market Analysis (Import) Division

This division has the responsibility for maintaining a continuing analysis of imports into Canada in order to provide information needed to accurately identify areas for potential development of import replacement industries and also to provide information valuable to commercial policy considerations, tariff negotiations and anti-dumping legislation.

Industrial and Trade Enquiries Division

This division is responsible for preparing, maintaining, and providing information for answering enquiries on establishing businesses in Canada and on the availability of export products from Canada. The division's reference publications include information on customs duties, income, corporation and property taxation, labour legislation, construction and equipment standards, federal incentives to industry, patents, copyrights and trade marks, and tariff preferences for Canadian goods abroad. It also issues the monthly publication "New Products Bulletin" which promotes manufacturing opportunities, lists licensing opportunities and new inventions.

Regional Offices

Regional offices are responsible for providing a liaison framework within Canada to ensure that provincial governments and regional organizations are adequately informed of the Department's activities and policies. Advice and assistance can be given directly to regional businessmen through these offices and regional views and opinions are more easily guaged at close hand. At present there are eight regional offices: Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and St. John's.

PUBLICITY BRANCH

The function of the Publicity Branch is to provide the maximum publicity and related public relations support to the trade promotion and industrial development programs initiated by other segments of the Department, i.e., industry sector branches, external trade services, promotion projects branch and policy services.

The branch is divided into two principal components: Canadian operations and International operations.

Canadian Operations

The Canadian operations has two principal objectives: First, to encourage Canadian manufacturing industry to take advantage of the industrial development programs available through the department and secondly, to encourage Canadian business and industry to engage more aggressively in export trade. At the same time a continuous effort is made to inform all Canadians of the importance to our economy of increasing our industrial productivity and selling more of our products abroad.

(a) The Program Publicity Division promotes programs such as BEAM, PAIT, IRDIA, Design Canada, General Adjustment Assistance Program, etc. Officers of this division provide liaison between departmental branches, individual companies and industrial associations.

(b) The Media Relations Division provides the general news and publicity service for the department directed to the Parliamentary Press Gallery, television, radio, newspapers, and Canadian business and trade publications. Press releases, ministerial speeches and statements and general information about the Department's activities of interest to the business community are prepared by this division. It also devotes considerable effort to publicizing "success" stories of Canadian firms who have (successfully) developed new manufacturing or production processes or have been successful in penetrating foreign markets. It produces the Department's annual report and other publications outlining its services and programs and giving "how to do it" information to would-be exporters.

Films are also produced for foreign and domestic audiences to promote export techniques, Canadian industry capabilities, etc. These films are available in several languages and are distributed to all the trade offices abroad.

The division also publicizes incoming missions and when considered necessary, a press officer accompanies the mission to make its nature and purpose known to as many Canadian suppliers as possible.

(c) The Foreign Trade/Commerce Extérieur Division publishes the Department's official publication on export market opportunities, and consideration is now being given to enlarging their editorial scope to include appropriate industrial development activities. Presently Foreign Trade has a circulation of more than 4,000 in the English business community and Commerce Extérieur has a readership of approximately 700 French businessmen.

Reports from Trade Commissioners on market and economic conditions in their territories, articles by commodity officers and other department personnel, and a wide variety of other commercial intelligence is made available to Canadian businessmen through these two publications.

International Operations

The function of the international operations group is to promote the sale of Canadian commodities abroad. It is responsible for the Department's foreign publicity efforts which are designed to support Canadian trade promotion programs abroad. There are four divisions in the international operations group:

(a) International Division is composed of trade publicity officers, each of whom is responsible for a specific group of commodities. Each officer develops a publicity program to promote these commodities in the target market areas selected. This is done in cooperation with the respective commodity officers in Ottawa and the Trade Commissioners stationed in the target market areas.

A publicity officer is attached to the staff of the Minister (Commercial) in London. A Paris-based public relations firm is retained to provide trade publicity counsel in France and other Francophone countries.

They conceive and manage publicity campaigns for various fairs, make literature available for use by the foreign press and place advertising in newspapers and trade publications abroad in support of Canadian commodities. They are also responsible for the dissemination of information and promotional material to trade commissioners for distribution to businessmen in their territories.

(b) Canada Courier Division publishes a tabloid-size newspaper promoting Canadian products and industrial processes to prospective users abroad. Published in English, French, German and Spanish, Italian and Arabic, it is used as a direct-mail piece by trade commissioners and its contents are keyed so that interested readers can make direct inquiries of the Department and the Canadian manufacturer.

(c) Special Publications Division researches, writes and edits the special booklets and brochures which are distributed at trade fairs abroad. This division also prepares commodity booklets on Canadian products, industry studies and technical reports on Canadian manufacturing processes.

(d) The fourth division of International Operations, Graphics, is responsible for graphic design and the art production services of the Department.

PROMOTION PROJECTS BRANCH

The Promotion Projects Branch has evolved from the former Trade Fairs and Missions Branch. It provides a central management facility for both the Department's continuing promotional programs and for ad hoc trade and industrial promotion projects which are developed periodically. This management service embraces a range of responsibilities from budgeting, through scheduling, organizing, coordinating and controlling, to evaluating cost effectiveness. The Branch consists of three divisions, the Trade Fairs Abroad Division, the Trade Missions Division and the Special Projects Division.

Trade Fairs Abroad Division

This division is responsible for developing recommendations for participation in appropriate foreign trade fairs which, when approved, make up the Department's annual trade fair program. More than a hundred exhibitions in all parts of the world are examined each year before those deemed to be best suited to the needs of Canadian exporters are selected.

The Department's trade missions are designed to perform a variety of functions ranging from the exploitation of sales possibilities for a particular commodity to the exploration of changes in exporting techniques necessary to improve sales prospects of Canadian goods. In recognition of these functions, and since missions must remain relatively small to be effective, invitations to participate in outgoing missions are extended to Canadian business leaders whose status in their particular industry ensures that the whole industry will benefit from the information obtained by the mission. Each outgoing mission is expected to prepare a report of its findings which is distributed within the industry concerned and to other interested parties throughout Canada.

Incoming missions normally consist of foreign businessmen and/or government officials who are brought to Canada to view Canadian products and to assess the capacity of Canadian industry to supply their requirements.

This division is also responsible for coordinating the planning of each exhibit in the schedule. It establishes a planning committee for each project to determine the nature and content of the exhibit, including publicity and advertising. Trade Fair Officers of the Division act as chairmen of the planning groups. This Division is responsible for evaluation of trade fair participations to ensure that Canadian manufacturers can look forward to good export opportunities when displaying their products in an exhibit sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Trade Missions Division

This division has as its functions the development of the Department's annual trade mission programs and the organization of all trade missions, both incoming and outgoing, sponsored by the Department. The division also acts as the liaison point for trade missions organized by other agencies and for which the assistance of the Department is required.

Both types of missions are used by the Department not only for the benefit of industrial products but also to promote agricultural sales and tourism.

Special Projects Division

This division is responsible for managing additional trade and industrial development projects.

The Promotion Projects Branch, as well as this central management facility, suggests modifications to present promotional techniques as appropriate, maintains a continual review of foreign promotional media and encourages new promotional techniques.

EXTERNAL SERVICES

External Services comprises the Trade Commissioner Service and the International Defence Programs Branch.

Trade Commissioner Service

The administrative and operative side of this service is headed by a general director aided by three directors and three assistant directors and is responsible for the work of the Service at home and abroad.

The Trade Commissioner Service has 74 trade offices in 51 countries. In addition to the trade commissioner, many offices have one or more assistant trade commissioners, depending upon the importance of the post to Canadian trade. In those centres where Canada maintains a diplomatic mission, the trade commissioner is attached to the mission as a commercial diplomatic officer and is given the title of Minister (Commercial), Minister Counsellor (Economic), Commercial Counsellor, Commercial Secretary or Assistant Commercial Secretary, according to his rank. When attached to consular posts, he carries the title Consul-General, Deputy Consul-General (Commercial), Consul (Commercial), or Vice-Consul (Commercial), according to his rank and whether the post is a consulate-general or consulate.

In its work abroad, the Trade Commissioner Service, in conjunction with other branches of the Department, promotes Canada's export trade and protects Canadian commercial interests in other countries by:

(a) initiating promotional programs for the profitable marketing of goods and services abroad.

(b) providing assistance to foreign importers and Canadian exporters, on request, on those matters which will lead to an improvement in Canada's balance of international payments.

(c) providing services designed to advise and encourage Canadian exporters in the marketing overseas of goods and services and foreign businessmen in looking to Canada as a source of supply.

(d) providing a commercial intelligence network for the more efficient identification of promotional priorities and opportunities, as well as a basis for a realistic and effective trade policy and domestic economic policy.

(e) providing services to other government departments in allied and complementary fields through the facilities and capabilities of the Trade Commissioner posts abroad.

In his efforts to help develop new markets for Canadian products and services, the Trade Commissioner acts as an export market consultant who encourages, advises, assists and often educates Canadian exporters in the how, the why, and the when of marketing in his post's territory. Trade Commissioners prepare market and economic reports, maintain vigilance over terms of access to foreign markets, help represent Canada at international trade and economic conferences, develop close contacts with local businessmen and government officials, report on trade opportunities, and process inquiries from Canadian businessmen. They also supervise on-the-spot organization of trade fairs in which the Department participates and assists with trade missions or other trade promotion initiatives. The Trade Commissioner holds watching briefs for other federal departments and, where he is the only Canadian Government representative, may undertake consular duties.

Trade Commissioners' Tours

The periodic return of trade commissioners for official tours of Canada is one of the most important factors in effecting practical co-operation between Canadian firms interested in export trade and businessmen in other countries. The trade commissioner can, during the course of his tour, discuss export and import problems with firms interested in exporting to, or importing from, his territory. The Department brings back trade commissioners by rotation, subject to the exigencies of trading conditions and of the Service generally. Well in advance of their scheduled arrival in Canada, individual exporters and importers are circularized for the purpose of arranging appointments. In addition, the Department publishes a notice in Foreign Trade inviting firms that may be interested in any particular territory to state whether an interview is desired. The names of such firms, together with the names of those with whom the trade commissioner has been in communication, form the basis of the itinerary. Businessmen wishing to interview any trade commissioner on tour may do so by communicating in advance with the Trade Commissioner Service, with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the local chamber of commerce, or one of the Department's regional offices.

A list of trade commissioners, showing their territories, is published periodically in Foreign Trade. The specific information obtainable from trade commissioners is listed below for the convenience of exporters.

If a Canadian firm is considering a market abroad for the first time, the trade commissioner can supply information on the following:

Market Requirements:

(a) whether a particular commodity, or one similar to it, is in use in the area;

(b) by whom it is used, and for what purpose;

(c) whether the country's requirements are met by local production, by imports, or by both;

(d) if a commodity is not in use, the probable reason, the possibilities of developing a market for it, and how this might be done.

International Defence Programs Branch

The International Defence Programs Branch has the responsibility for export sales of defence equipment and for encouraging international cooperation in defence industrial research, development and production programs both through direct negotiation with other governments and foreign industry, and through defence production specialists stationed abroad. Counsellors (Defence Production) are located in Washington, London, Paris, Bonn and Rome, and at the Canadian Delegation to NATO in Brussels, and attachés (Defence Production) in a number of centres in the United States.

The Branch is responsible for the management of the Canada/U.S. Defence Development and Production Sharing Program, and is able to provide advice and assistance to Canadian defence equipment exporters with respect to terms of access to all other foreign defence markets, either for direct sales or on a cooperative development or production basis. The coordinating role of the Branch is of particular interest, as it is here that defence-related activities and policies which are the prime responsibility of other branches and other government departments, are brought together in support of a specific defence equipment sale or cooperative defence industrial project.

The Branch comprises a Market Research and Analysis Division; United States and Overseas Market Development Divisions responsible for advising on, and actively seeking to improve, the terms of access to the U.S. and overseas defence markets respectively, and a Project Marketing Division responsible for direct promotion of specific defence equipment items. In support of these activities, the Branch also publishes and distributes specialized defence publications such as the Canada/U.S. "Production Sharing Handbook", "Canadian Defence Products", "Canadian Defence Commodities", and a number of other brochures and pamphlets aimed at particular markets to support our participation in international activities involving defence equipment or technology.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

The Export Development Corporation, in succession to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, will administer new and expanded facilities for export credits, export credits insurance and guarantees and will encourage and facilitate the provision of private financing for export. It will also administer a facility for the insurance of private Canadian investments in developing countries. The new Corporation will assume ECIC's existing functions, assets and liabilities and the bill for its establishment retains many features of the Export Credits Insurance Act. However, provision is made for operations on a more comprehensive scale geared to anticipated growth of trade and the fuller realization of Canada's trade potential. A number of technical changes will simplify administrative procedures and make the Corporation more responsive to exporters' needs and competitive situations. Operations will be coordinated with other government programs relating to industrial development in Canada and assistance to developing countries abroad.

General direction of the affairs of the Corporation is to be vested in a Board of Directors which, in addition to senior officials, will include representatives of the private export and financial communities. It is considered that the infusion of business knowledge and experience will greatly enhance coordination of effort in export development between the public and private sectors. Delegation of authority for day-to-day operations will facilitate the prompt and efficient dispatch of business.

Authorized capital and capital surplus of the Corporation have together been set at $50 million, as compared with $20 million in the case of ECIC. Adequate borrowing and other authorities are provided to meet anticipated business growth over a number of years and will be drawn upon as required.

Broad and flexible authority is provided for issue of export credits insurance and of guarantees to facilitate the provision of private financing for credit in connection with any sound export transaction. In particular, coverage of services and other invisible exports is much extended. The statutory ceiling for liability of the Export Development Corporation under contracts of insurance and guarantees is to be $500 million (the limit for ECIC, which has been reached was $200 million). In addition, as in the case of ECIC, credit transactions deemed to be in the national interest but which are beyond the Corporation's capacity to cover may be insured and/or guarantees issued at direct risk of the Government. The maximum liability which may be assumed in this connection is $500 million.

It is the intention to place the conduct of the export credits insurance and guarantees functions under extensive and continuing review to ensure that they remain responsive to changing circumstances and the needs of the export community. An active program will be undertaken immediately to simplify administrative procedures and to familiarize exporters with the services and facilities available.

To ensure that Canadian exporters of high-priority capital goods and services are not inhibited from pursuing major sales opportunities abroad requiring long term or, exceptionally, medium term financing, provision is made for acceptance of liability under direct loans to foreign buyers of up to $800 million (ECIC $500 million). Within the overall ceiling, two authorities are to be established—respectively for lending by the Corporation for its own account on approval by the Board of Directors to a limit on outstanding liabilities of $600 million and for lending for the account of the Government to a limit of $200 million. The latter facility would be for very large export transactions or to meet other special situations considered by the Government to be in the national interest.

In medium and long term financing, the Corporation will have extended powers to make loans, to trade in export paper and to issue guarantees to private lenders in connection with export transactions. It will also be empowered to provide financing to national development banks and other similar financial institutions abroad, to cover a proportion of local costs of projects abroad, to finance services supplied from Canada even when these are not directly associated with equipment supply. The chartered banks and financial institutions abroad will be encouraged to participate with EDC in its lending and guarantee operations. Interest and other charges by the Corporation will generally reflect the cost of money to it, bearing in mind, however, the need to meet competition in particular cases, and will provide for the operating expenses of the medium and long term financing facility.

In order to improve the competitive position of Canadian companies in world markets and to involve the private sector more actively in international development, a facility is being established for the first time to insure Canadian investments in developing countries against loss due to expropriation or confiscation, inability to repatriate earnings or capital, and insurrection, revolution or war. A liability limit of $50 million is proposed for this new facility.

Finally, a systematic and continuing program of liaison and cooperation with Canadian financial institutions is to be undertaken.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

The Canadian International Development Agency, formerly the External Aid Office, was established in November 1960 as a separate agency of the Canadian Government incorporating functions relating to Canadian External Air programs formerly performed by the Departments of Trade and Commerce, External Affairs, Finance, along with other agencies of government.

The President of the Canadian International Development Agency is responsible to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the conduct and operation of Canada's programs of international development assistance.

Under these programs Canada provides a wide range of equipment, materials, commodities, food and engineering services as well as teachers, professors and technical advisors to assist developing countries achieve satisfactory economic progress. The form of help ranges from large capital projects and a considerable quantity of raw and semi-processed industrial materials and fertilizers to small items of equipment.

On occasions when the Canadian International Development Agency is required to initiate procurement for recipient governments purchase action is normally carried out on behalf of the Canadian International Development Agency by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. In these circumstances purchasing is conducted in accordance with the procedures established by the Canadian Government Contract Regulations which, as a rule, require competitive tender call. In recent years development assistance funds have been made available more frequently in the form of loans and procurement is being carried out directly by the recipient governments and their licensed agencies. Tenders may be called from potential suppliers in Canada directly or through a Canadian agency which may include the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Canadian aid financing may also be authorized as a result of an international tender call by a developing country when a Canadian supplier has been the successful tenderer or for direct purchase of commodities and industrial raw materials; when prices are established by world market.

Normally, each proposal is screened by the Canadian International Development Agency to ensure that the requirement can be met from Canadian sources with a high Canadian content. When tenders are called the contract is usually awarded to the lowest bidder, subject to the application of a "preference" in favour of suppliers with the higher Canadian content.

Through the technical and educational assistance programs, Canadians are sent abroad to advise and teach and selected personnel from developing countries are brought to Canada for training and study in a variety of fields.

The Canadian International Development Agency also administers the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan in Canada with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada providing the secretarial services.

In addition the Agency cooperates with multilateral aid-giving organizations such as the United Nations Development Program, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Asian Development Bank. The Agency's operations in Latin America are administered by the Inter-American Development Bank.

The Canadian International Development Agency is presently located at 75 Albert Street, Ottawa 4.

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics issues detailed monthly, quarterly and annual reports on Canada's foreign trade. These are extremely useful to exporters and those interested in developing export markets, and to manufacturers and others interested in information on imports. They are among more than 1,000 DBS publications used by business and industry in production planning and market research of all kinds.

Its monthly reports on the Trade of Canada give information on trade by commodities, showing for each commodity listed the total quantity and value of the trade with individual countries, showing for each foreign country the quantity and value of trade for every commodity separately listed. A final annual report in three volumes provides complete statistical detail, with comparative figures for previous years, analyses of the statistics, and information on tariff revenues. Preliminary bulletins supply advance summaries of trade information each month.

A new DBS service provides information on Canadian exports to the United States for 230 commodity groups and by 18 U.S. Census subdivisions.

Also available is a new series of export and import commodity classifications showing in addition to the classification, numeric and alphabetic indexes which are updated at regular intervals. Full details will be found in the DBS Catalogue described below.

Statistics on the Canadian balance of international payments are released in quarterly and annual reports. These can also be useful to the Canadian manufacturer in studying the international background affecting trade.

All these trade publications — together with numerous others dealing statistically with manufacturing and a wide range of Canadian economic and social activities, many of which provide useful information in planning, marketing and production programs for particular industries — are available at nominal rates from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and from the Queen's Printer, Ottawa. Information as to titles, contents and prices of its reports and bulletins is contained in the Bureau's Catalogue of Publications, copies of which are available on request from the Bureau.

EXPORT EDUCATION

In addition to supporting, both directly and indirectly, a variety of export educational programs across the country, the Association provides a comprehensive program of export education on a continuous, nationwide basis. In order to initiate members into the techniques and procedures of exporting, basic courses in export are sponsored in co-operation with the Federal and Provincial Governments. This elementary course has been supplemented by a new senior international marketing course which was sponsored for the first time by the Association in December, 1968.

These courses are complemented by continuing programs of export education organized by the Association through its Export Study Club organization. Seven clubs, operating in, respectively, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, provide the means through which exporters, both new and established, can exchange experiences, discuss problems and learn about the techniques and procedures of exporting. In general, the Clubs' programs are oriented to the techniques and procedures of selling and shipping abroad. Each group, however, plans its activities to meet the special circumstances and needs of its members.

In Ontario, greater emphasis has been placed on the use of export courses as the means of giving new exporters the grounding they need in the mechanics of exporting. This has enabled the Export Study Club to devote its activities to the techniques of exporting and more sophisticated aspects of exporting such as pricing strategies, taxation, overseas manufacturing and marketing operations, cultures and customs. Highlights of the 1968-69 season were: a conducted tour of the Port of Toronto and Harbour; "The President's Night" with the Association's President addressing the 24th Annual Dinner; and the Annual Meeting in May which was combined with visits to two plants to see at first hand how companies grow as a direct result of selling their products abroad.

In the Atlantic Provinces, the two clubs in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were joined by a new club in Prince Edward Island at the end of 1968. The new club commenced operations with a ten-week elementary course in export marketing to initiate its membership into the procedures of export. The other two clubs, both in their fourth seasons of operations, carried out varied programs of activity dealing with export techniques, procedures and marketing areas. An extremely successful export seminar was sponsored by the Export Study Club of New Brunswick in December.

The Export Study Club of British Columbia, now in its eighth year of operation, and the Export Study Club of Quebec which, like Ontario, has completed 24 seasons of activity, provided monthly programs for their members in the form of dinner meetings. During their seasons, attention was focussed on a broad range of subjects.

With export consciousness and expertise being developed in this way, this unique Export Study Club organization continues to expand, its membership now totalling more than 1600.

PUBLICATIONS

The Association from time to time publishes detailed booklets on various aspects of export trade techniques. These studies, together with other reference publications for exporters, are listed in the chapter headed "Bibliography of Export References".

Industrial Canada

The Association's official monthly magazine "Industrial Canada" is, like the CMA itself, directed towards the promotion of Canadian manufacturing industries and the specific interests of exporters. Its regular service features include timely information on foreign sales opportunities, changes in foreign customs and exchange regulations, and significant news items regarding such matters as import licensing, customs tariffs, transportation developments and export controls in Canada and in other countries. Keeping Canadian exporters up to date on all of these topics and on foreign economic developments which affect the trade climate are the monthly "Industrial Canada" features entitled "Tariff News", "International Trade and Industry" and "Transportation Digest". In addition, special articles on export subjects are periodically included in "Industrial Canada's" editorial programme which is consistently planned to provide readers with expert informaton on the latest in proven management techniques.

Canadian Trade Index

For over 65 years "Canadian Trade Index", the Association's annual directory, has provided buyers and sellers throughout the world with detailed information to facilitate their contacts with Canadian manufacturers. With a finely-classified products section and details as to the size, type of business, brand names, foreign representation, operating executives, parent-subsidiary relationships and geographical distribution of over 12,700 manufacturers across Canada, "Canadian Trade Index" is an active and effective instrument of trade promotion. Copies are distributed to thousands of importers in over sixty countries through the cooperation of the Canadian Government Trade Commissioner Service.

Circular Service

Important matters of immediate interest to exporters and detailed technical trade data are conveyed to members with all possible speed by CMA circulars, issued at the national, divisional and branch level.

EXPORT TRADE POLICY

The development of Canadian trade policies and government services has always been a vital part of the Association's export service to members. Export policies are generated from the membership level through a number of specialized committes and sub-committees whose focal point is the Association's Export Committee. Timely recommendations, based on the considered views of exporting manufacturers, are presented to government on a variety of matters including: international and bilateral trade negotiations; trade representation abroad; fairs, exhibitions and missions; export credits insurance and financing; protection of foreign property; foreign aid programs: non-tariff barriers; taxation.

The Association stands for and advocates the greatest possible trade between nations and believes that steadfast support should be given to existing international organizations and institutions in their efforts to solve the problems of world trade and finance. It recognizes that the well-being of the Canadian people depends to a great extent on the volume of Canada's export trade, which provides the means of purchasing necessary imports.

The Association believes that the extent of Canada's export trade depends to a great degree upon the ingenuity and hard work of many thousands of Canadian firms and individuals engaged in the export of foodstuffs, raw materials, manufactured goods and services. Exporters must have all possible knowledge of the trade practices and requirements covering export shipments and it is for this reason that the Association has paid so much attention to its specialized departmental services which have continuously expanded to keep abreast of the times.

In the increasingly complex modern world, however, government policy plays a growing part. Canadian Governments have always displayed a keen interest in the problems of exporters, and, wherever and whenever necessary, the Association has placed the views and recommendations of exporters before the Government concerning trade policy and its administration. Canadian manufacturers and exporters are particularly fortunate in being served by a Trade Commissioner Service which is second to none in the world, and the Association has had particularly cordial relationships with these officers who, on their Canadian tours, have made CMA offices their headquarters for over half a century.

The Association maintains close liaison with federal and provincial government departments concerned with Canada's external trade. It also cooperates with manufacturers' and businessmen's organizations in other countries in the interests of facilitating international commerce and takes an active part in the work of such international bodies as the International Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Business and Industry Advisory Committee for O.E.C.D., the Pacific Basin Economic Co-operation Committee.

This list also includes an indication of the number of employees. The rating code letters following each company listing are interpreted as follows:

KEY

(A) up to 25 employees
(B) 25 to 49 employees
(C) 50 to 99 employees
(D) 100 to 199 employees
(E) 200 to 499 employees
